The 3rd Force Recon Company was a specialized unit of the United States Marine Corps that played a critical role in the Vietnam War. The company was activated in 1969 and assigned to the III Marine Amphibious Force. The 3rd Force Recon Company was tasked with conducting reconnaissance and surveillance missions in enemy-held territory, as well as providing direct action support to other Marine units.

The 3rd Force Recon Company was composed of highly trained and experienced Marines. The company's members were all volunteers, and they had to meet rigorous physical and mental standards. The Marines in the 3rd Force Recon Company were proficient in a variety of combat skills, including weapons handling, close quarters combat, and survival techniques.

The 3rd Force Recon Company conducted a wide range of missions in Vietnam. The company's missions included reconnaissance and surveillance patrols, ambushes, raids, and direct action operations. The 3rd Force Recon Company also provided support to other Marine units, such as the 1st Marine Division and the 3rd Marine Division.

The 3rd Force Recon Company was a highly effective unit. The company's Marines were responsible for gathering critical intelligence that helped to shape the course of the war. The company's Marines also conducted a number of successful combat operations, which helped to disrupt the enemy's operations and degrade his morale.

The 3rd Force Recon Company was deactivated in 1970. The company's Marines were reassigned to other units, and the company's equipment was transferred to other units. The 3rd Force Recon Company's legacy lives on, however, in the form of the Marine Corps' current Force Recon companies.

Operations and Missions
