The Role of the Filmmaker

Ang Lee places great importance on the role of the filmmaker as a storyteller and an artist. He views the filmmaker as a visionary who has the responsibility to use their craft to create meaningful and impactful stories. Lee believes that filmmakers should strive for originality and authenticity, exploring new perspectives and challenging conventions. He encourages filmmakers to take risks and to push the boundaries of the medium, experimenting with innovative techniques and storytelling approaches.

The Future of Cinema

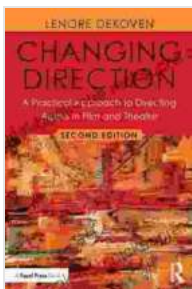

Lee also reflects on the future of cinema, expressing both optimism and uncertainty. He acknowledges the challenges facing the film industry, including the rise of streaming services and the fragmentation of audiences. However, he remains hopeful about the future of cinema, believing that it will continue to evolve and adapt to the changing landscape. Lee emphasizes the importance of filmmakers embracing new technologies and platforms, while also preserving the core values and principles of the art form.
