During his travels throughout Latin America, Guevara witnessed firsthand the poverty and exploitation faced by the indigenous population. These experiences sparked his passion for social justice and ignited his commitment to revolutionary change.

Guerrilla Warfare and the Cuban Revolution

In 1955, Guevara joined the July 26th Movement, led by Fidel Castro. Together with a small group of rebels, they launched a guerrilla campaign against the dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista in Cuba.

Minister of Industries

After the Cuban Revolution triumphed in 1959, Guevara served as Minister of Industries. He was responsible for implementing economic policies aimed at creating a more equitable society and reducing dependency on foreign powers.

Guevara's commitment to Marxism-Leninism and his belief in the necessity of a socialist revolution brought him into conflict with some of his comrades within the Cuban government. He eventually resigned from his ministerial position and left Cuba in 1965.

International Activism and Death

After leaving Cuba, Guevara continued his revolutionary activities around the globe. He traveled to the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and Bolivia, seeking to inspire and support local guerrilla movements.

On October 8, 1967, Guevara was captured by Bolivian government forces while leading a guerrilla operation. He was executed the following day, at the age of 39. His death became a symbol of the sacrifices and struggles of revolutionary movements worldwide.
