Hired Gun quickly became one of the largest private security companies in Iraq. The company provided a range of services, including security for government officials, businesses, and aid organizations. Hired Gun also provided training to Iraqi security forces.

From the beginning, Hired Gun was a controversial company. The company's employees were accused of human rights abuses, including torture, murder, and rape. Hired Gun was also accused of war crimes, such as the indiscriminate killing of civilians.

In 2004, Hired Gun employees were involved in the Nisour Square massacre, in which 17 Iraqi civilians were killed. The incident led to a criminal investigation, and several Hired Gun employees were convicted of manslaughter.

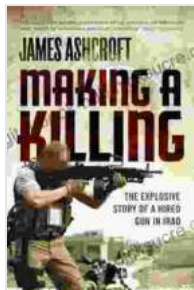

Despite the controversy, Hired Gun continued to operate in Iraq. The company received millions of dollars in contracts from the U.S. government. Hired Gun also expanded its operations to other countries, including Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Yemen.

In 2010, Hired Gun was sold to a Chinese investment firm. The sale was controversial, and many critics argued that it would give the Chinese government access to sensitive information about U.S. operations in Iraq and other countries.

Today, Hired Gun continues to operate in Iraq. The company provides security for a range of clients, including the U.S. government, businesses, and aid organizations. Hired Gun also provides training to Iraqi security forces.

The story of Hired Gun is a complex one. The company has been accused of serious crimes, but it has also played a role in the U.S. war effort in Iraq.

Hired Gun is a controversial company, but it is also a powerful one. The company's activities have had a significant impact on the lives of Iraqis and Americans alike.
