The Stunt Reporters were a popular part of the American Girl brand, and they helped to shape the image of the magazine and its readers. However, their history has been largely forgotten. This article will explore the hidden history of the America Girl Stunt Reporters, and will shed light on their important role in the development of the American Girl brand.

The Early Years

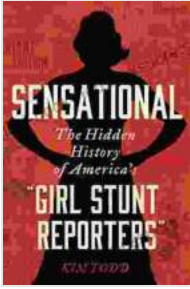

The America Girl magazine was first published in 1958. It was a monthly magazine for girls aged 7 to 14. The magazine featured stories, articles, and activities that were designed to appeal to girls' interests. In the early years, the magazine focused on traditional topics such as fashion, beauty, and cooking. However, in the mid-1960s, the magazine began to publish more articles on current events and social issues. This was a reflection of the changing times, as the United States was in the midst of the Vietnam War and the Civil Rights Movement.
