Sitting Bull

Sitting Bull was born in 1831 near the Grand River in present-day South Dakota. He was given the name Tȟatȟánka Íyotake, which means "Slow Buffalo." As a young man, Sitting Bull quickly gained a reputation for his bravery and leadership skills. He fought in numerous battles against the United States government, including the Battle of Little Bighorn in 1876.

Sitting Bull was a deeply spiritual man who believed that the Lakota people were destined to live in harmony with the land. He was also a skilled orator and diplomat. In 1877, he met with President Ulysses S. Grant in Washington, D.C., to discuss the future of the Lakota people. However, the negotiations were unsuccessful, and Sitting Bull returned to the Great Plains.

In 1890, Sitting Bull was killed by Indian police officers while resisting arrest. His death marked the end of an era for the Lakota people. However, his legacy continues to live on. Sitting Bull is remembered as a great warrior, leader, and spiritual guide.

Crazy Horse

Crazy Horse was born in 1840 near the Black Hills in present-day South Dakota. He was given the name Tashunka Witko, which means "His Horse Is Crazy." As a young man, Crazy Horse quickly gained a reputation for his bravery and fighting skills. He fought in numerous battles against the United States government, including the Battle of Little Bighorn in 1876.

Crazy Horse was a fierce warrior who believed that the Lakota people should never surrender their land to the United States government. He was also a skilled tactician and strategist. In 1877, he led a group of Lakota warriors in a successful raid on a United States Army camp at the Rosebud River.

In 1877, Crazy Horse surrendered to the United States government. He was imprisoned at Fort Robinson in Nebraska, where he died in 1877 under suspicious circumstances. Crazy Horse is remembered as a great warrior and leader. He is also a symbol of the Lakota people's resistance to the United States government.
