Early Life

Truett Cathy was born in 1921 in Eatonton, Georgia. He was the youngest of seven children. His father was a farmer and his mother was a homemaker. Truett grew up in a Christian home, and he attended church regularly. He was baptized at the age of 12.

As a young man, Truett worked on his father's farm. He also helped out at his family's grocery store. After graduating from high school, Truett attended Georgia Tech. He studied architecture, but he dropped out after two years to help his father with the family business.

Starting Chick-fil-A

In 1946, Truett opened his first restaurant in Hapeville, Georgia. He called it the Dwarf Grill. The restaurant was small, but it was a success. Truett's food was good, and he treated his customers well. In 1961, Truett changed the name of his restaurant to Chick-fil-A.

Chick-fil-A quickly became a popular restaurant chain. Truett opened new restaurants throughout the Southeast. He also began to develop a franchise program. By the 1980s, Chick-fil-A was one of the most successful fast-food chains in the United States.

A Man of Faith

Truett Cathy was a devout Christian. He believed that his success was a gift from God. He lived his life according to Christian principles. He was honest, hardworking, and generous.

Truett's faith was evident in his business practices. He closed his restaurants on Sundays so that his employees could attend church. He also donated a portion of his profits to Christian organizations.

A Generous Man

Truett Cathy was a generous man. He used his wealth to help others. He donated money to churches, schools, and hospitals. He also supported a variety of charitable organizations.

Truett's generosity extended to his employees. He paid them well and provided them with benefits. He also created a scholarship program to help employees' children attend college.
